Toronto trees are seriously stressed out

ENVIRONMENT

Poor soil, new developments threatening urban forest

May Warren
Metro | Toronto

Toronto's urban forest is stressed out, and if something's not done soon we could lose trees just when we need them the most, according to a new report.

The city's trees are suffering from poor soil quality and don't have enough room to grow due to pressure from new developments, the Green Infrastructure Ontario Coalition says. Those problems are on top of those posed by pests like the emerald ash borer and extreme weather, said Janet McKay, coalition chair.

"Right when we need our urban forest the most and we know that they provide us a buffer for the aspects of climate change, they're at greatest risk from those stresses," she said.

A strong urban forest can help offset climate change by absorbing carbon dioxide and improve our health by reducing air pollution. Trees also provide much-needed shade on sizzling concrete surfaces.

"Our temperatures are only going to get warmer, our storms are going to get more intense, invasive insect problems are probably going to get worse," McKay said. "We're sort of sounding the alarm bell that, 'Hey, we're facing a crisis here and our urban forests need support.'"

The GTA is home to 34.2 million trees, 85 per cent of which fall into the smallest size category. Only 1 per cent fall into the largest size category. That shows many trees don't have the right growing conditions to thrive, according to the report.

Plus, four species make up 54 per cent of urban forest in Toronto, leaving it extremely vulnerable to pests and diseases that attack specific trees, the report says.

McKay is advocating for a provincial urban forest strategy that dedicates money to green, and not just grey, infrastructure, like roads and bridges.

Gearing up for Ramadan

SYRIAN REFUGEES IN CANADA
A FAMILY'S JOURNEY

Refugees set to start fasting next week

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

One commodity is going to make all the difference for the Tamador family during this year's Ramadan: water.

"We can take many showers now, everyday," said Tamador, the Syrian mother of five who arrived in Toronto last December. That's in contrast to years spent in war zones and refugee camps where access to water was limited, hampering their ability to go through the fasting period.

Tamador's children are all under 16, which means they won't be fasting as much — maybe once every couple of days. Mohammed, 11, is excited nonetheless.

"I will pray more. Five times every day," he said, echoing his mother's comments of taking the children to the mosque more often during Ramadan month, which starts next week. Tamador is also entertaining the idea of having their host family participate "if they want," she said.

"We've been accustomed to hearing them pray every morning around 4:30," said Gareth Callaway, whose family has welcomed the Syrians in their Markham house, through a private sponsoring group.

Five months after arrival, the Syrian family has become familiar with life in Canada — with kids attending schools and participating in local activities, while the mother attends ESL classes and works in grocery stores.

Despite coordinated efforts, the sponsoring group has yet to secure a separate place to rent for the Syrian family to settle in.

But that shouldn't be a problem during Ramadan, said Callaway.

"We'll probably have to find a way to eat lunch somewhere in the corner where we're not in their faces," he said. "We know it's a big part of their faith and it's impressive how they look forward to it."

Experience it yourself

The Ahmaddiya Muslim Jama'at will launch its Fast With A Muslim Friend campaign on Monday, inviting non-Muslim Canadians to take part in the Ramadan experience.

The events are particularly important this year for thousands of Syrians who will be experiencing "what it feels like to have your fellow Canadians supporting your beliefs," said the group's spokesperson Blawal Aleem.

Tamador and her children are about to have their first Ramadan in Canada. LIZ BEDDALL/METRO

SETTLEMENT

ESL to stop in summer

Syrians enrolled in language classes in Toronto are being told school is out for summer, thanks to federal funding shortages that are also seeing Syrians turned away from classes in Vancouver.

Settlement agencies told a House of Commons committee Thursday that while the government topped up their budgets to deal with the influx of over 25,000 Syrians in a matter of three months, the money isn't going far enough.

So a difficult decision had to be made, said Mario Calla, the executive director of COSTI, which settles government-assisted refugees in Toronto.

Rather than scale back the number of classes altogether, they decided to just stop offering their 27 federally funded courses over the summer.

"Our hands are tied," Calla said. "It's a compromise situation."

Federal funding for language classes is tied to the number of immigrants agencies served the year before. The base funding for 2016-2017 did not take into account the surge in Syrian refugees, who proved eager to access programs.

While COSTI is trying to connect Syrians with provincial courses and other programs, that doesn't cover all the bases, Calla said. "Usually the women get cheated in that process, because child minding isn't available."

French's to start producing condiment in Toronto in 2017

Move over Leamington. Toronto will soon become Ontario's new ketchup capital.

French's Food Company has struck a deal with Select Food Products Ltd., a food manufacturing plant near Bermondsey Rd. and O'Connor Dr., to produce ketchup with Canadian tomatoes beginning in 2017.

Increasing manufacturing and production in Canada is an important part of our business model.

"We are thrilled to be partnering with French's on this opportunity," said Select Food Products president Andrew Mitchell in an interview. "We've been talking to French's for a little while. They have come to visit us, too.

"We wanted to make sure it's a right fit because this is a long-term partnership," Mitchell said. "I like them. I can work with them. Our values align with their values."

The move comes after a huge public uproar over Canadian pride and what makes a ketchup a truly Canadian ketchup.

Elliott Penner, president of French's Food division, which is part of international conglomerate Reckitt Benckiser, committed in the spring to move ketchup production to Ontario.

"Increasing manufacturing and production in Canada is an important part of our business model," Penner said in a news release. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

TOURISM

Group making case for Muskoka flight

A regional tourism group says preliminary talks are underway about a proposal to operate direct passenger flights between Toronto and Muskoka.

"We're developing a case to bring commercial air service to Muskoka," James Murphy, executive director of Explorers' Edgesaid on Thursday.

There's a meeting planned for June 23 with the District of Muskoka, when Explorers' Edge will push the case for making minor upgrades to the local airport in Gravenhurst and seeking Transport Canada security screening authorization.

"Right now the planes are flying right over us," Murphy said.

The goal is to bring vacationers from the U.S. up to cottage country in time for Canada's 150th anniversary festivities in 2017, Murphy said.

He said WestJet, Air Canada and Porter could all service the area, but that his group has had "no official talks with airlines."

Representatives of the airlines said Thursday that flights into Muskoka aren't on their radar. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Caterpillars ready to take tents down

INFESTATION

Plague of critters on the way out soon, insists expert

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

If tent caterpillars have taken over your garden and you're not sure whether to fell valued trees, you can take heart in knowing the invading species won't last long.

"By July 1 they should be gone. All of them," said a confident Glenn Richardson, president of Toronto Entomologists Association.

Residents of a Scarborough neighbourhood near McCowan and Finch recently experienced an infestation of caterpillars, which were mainly mounting their tents in the crabapple trees on the street or just meandering around the area.

The city's forest health care inspector acknowledged the problem was already out of their hands since larvae had already developed in the egg cases or nests. But Richardson said people could still cut the nests down and dispose of them, stomp on them or just burn them out — although "burning is pretty cruel," he said.

"It's whatever you're comfortable with in general," he said. "I'm a fairly humane person so I'd cut a branch with a nest and throw it somewhere in the ravine. Maybe they'll survive, maybe they won't."

Richardson explained caterpillar plague is normally a result of weather conditions. When it's wet and rainy, caterpillars are more likely to survive and reproduce than their predators — which include birds, wasps and others.

But in hot and dry weather, they don't cope very well. A hot season makes them transform into moss and "nothing really happens until the next cool season" when they can pick up again, he said.

SMARTTRACK

Seven fewer stops on Tory line

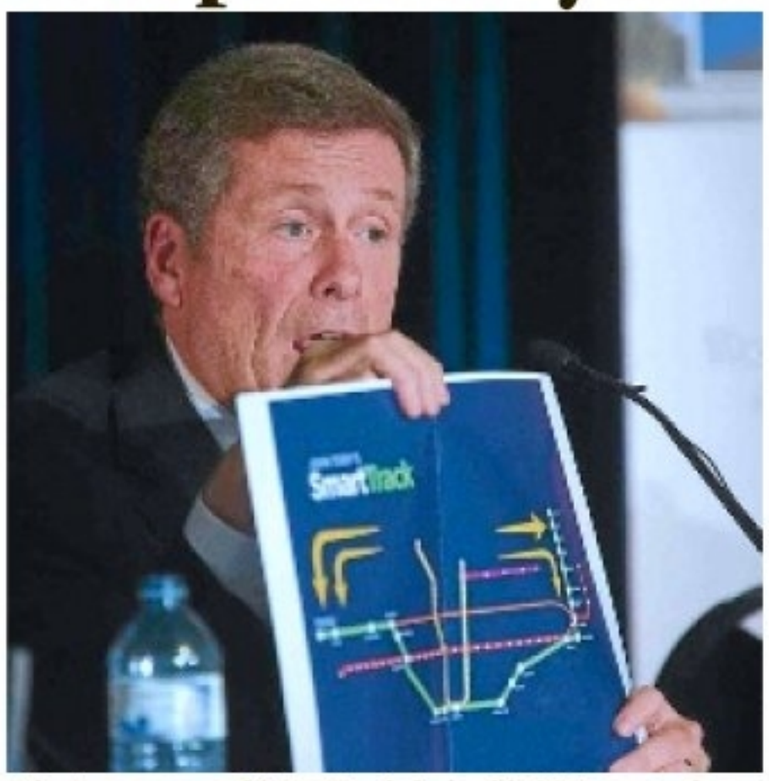
City planners are poised to recommend that John Tory's signature transit line be built with seven new stations, six fewer than he promised during the mayoral campaign.

In March, city council directed staff to consider two options for SmartTrack, Tory's plan to add transit service using existing GO Transit corridors: one that would include seven to eight new stops, and another that would include four to five.

With staff due to make their recommendation in a major transit report in two weeks, acting director of transit and sustainable transportation James Perttula said staff believe an alignment with seven stops is the best option.

The seven-stop plan would have slightly lower ridership than the four- or five-station alignment, because the additional stations would increase travel times and make service less attractive to some riders. But Perttula said ridership is only one factor that staff considered.

"By having more stations we provide improved access for more people, and more access to employment opportunities, which is a key part of this, connecting people and jobs," he said.



John Tory proposed SmartTrack during his 2014 mayoral run.
CHRIS SO/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

The proposed stops are at St. Clair West, Liberty Village, the Unilever site, Gerrard and Pape, Lawrence East, Ellesmere, and Finch East.

An eighth stop along the Kitchener corridor between Liberty Village and Union Station was also considered because it would have strong ridership, Perttula said, but staff determined it wasn't physically feasible due to the high number of tracks that converge in that part of town.

Existing GO stations would also be part of SmartTrack, which is being constructed as part of Metrolinx's previously planned regional express rail project.

URBAN PLANNING

Advocates plan sit-ins in spots without seats

Torontonians shouldn't have to hold on to their butts.

That's the message from a group of urban enthusiasts looking for more places for the city to park its collective keister.

"A lot of these great spaces you can tell people want to hang out in, they're at times sitting on the planters or leaning against the walls. There's no infrastructure provided," said Stas Ukhanov, one of the people behind #SitTO, an informal campaign to point out a lack of public seating.

By Ukhanov's count, on Yonge Street from Lake Ontario all the way to Bloor Street, weary travellers come across just two benches, both supplied by businesses.

"You can have great streets and parks that are full of people, but if the people don't stick around, you don't have the vibrant places that people enjoy."

He points to the Spanish Steps in Rome, the red stairs atop the TKTS booth in New York's Times Square, and the steps outside Ryerson University's student learning centre as enviable examples of people-filled places.

"It's almost a natural amphitheatre into the streets," he said of the building at Yonge and Gould streets.

> Toronto has always been a sittable city, and it continues to be one.
> Urban planner Adam Popper

On Saturday, as part of 100in1Day, a showcase of city improvement projects, the group will unfold 20 Ikea chairs in spots around town.

The chair clusters would accelerate a concept that's already spreading in the city: Streets for people.

Toronto the Good wasn't always dotted with patios, and tickets were once handed out for loitering, he said.

"There was just this idea that if you're on the streets you probably shouldn't be there and you should move along," Ukhanov said. "Streets are not just for moving, they're our greatest public land assets."

Streets make up one of the largest chunks of publicly owned space, covering more than 25 per cent of the city, a greater proportion than parkland, according to the city's Complete Streets office.

"Toronto has always been a sittable city, and it continues to be one," Adam Popper, an urban planner and project manager with the department, wrote in an email.

Not including park benches, the city has almost 1,700 public street benches, with anywhere from 100 to 200 added each year.

"The challenge is finding enough space for seating," he said, adding that the city must consider accessibility, the desirability of a sitting spot, and maintaining rights-of-way.

The Diefenbunker toilets are 'pooped'

BOMB SHELTER

Cold War museum seeks help with plumbing

It was built to withstand a nuclear bomb, but the Diefenbunker is experiencing a more mundane problem. To be specific, its toilets are busted.

Or, as the Cold War museum puts it: "There's no way around it, our system is pooped."

The plumbing crisis has reached the point where the Ottawa attraction has issued a public request for donations to pay for the necessary repairs.

"If you've been to the museum ... you'll have no doubt noticed the many OUT OF ORDER signs that grace our stall doors," the Diefenbunker says in its fundraising appeal. "And stalls that are actually open welcome visitors with a kind reminder to hold that flush for a count of 10."

The bomb shelter was commissioned in 1959 by then prime minister John Diefenbaker to house senior government officials in case of a nuclear attack. It was declared a national historic site in 1994 and turned into a museum three years later.

The toilets were carefully designed. According to the museum, they're mounted on rubber pads and have flexible connections to the main plumbing system "so they can't break or disconnect in case of an explosion (insert potty humour here)."

Repairing the aging fixtures is now an expensive proposition, said Alexandra Galloway, visitor services co-ordinator.

"We are a not-for-profit museum, so updating our plumbing — toilets and things like that — does cost quite a bit of money," she said Wednesday.

"Our goal is (to raise) $10,000, but however much we end up getting would be great."

URBAN PROJECTS

Mayors promised flexible funding

Stephanie Taylor
Metro | Winnipeg

The federal infrastructure minister assured Canada's big city mayors that despite criteria required to receive millions under the first stage of his government's infrastructure program, there will be flexibility on project-by-project basis.

Amarjeet Sohi was in Winnipeg to meet with members of the Federation of the Canadian Municipalities' Big City Mayors' Caucus Thursday to discuss details on the first phase of the Liberals' infrastructure program, which will see billions earmarked for transit and waste water upgrades.

He said the money will be allocated for repairs to existing infrastructure, retroactive to April 1, as well as fund the planning, even building of new projects, so long as they are complete by March 2018.

"Having said that, we will be working very closely with each municipality in each province to understand their needs, and if there's a flexibility required on a particular project-to-project basis, we will work with our local communities," Sohi said.

"This is about ensuring that we are here to support local communities. Your federal government is not here to tell municipalities what to do and how to build infrastructure."

"Overall, the message is flexibility and that's appreciated," Edmonton Mayor Don Iveson said of Sohi's remarks.

He also said mayors were OK with the government's two-phase approach to funding $60 billion of its infrastructure program.

"The sooner we know money will be flowing in Phase 2, the easier it is to commit to moving ahead with the first smaller piece because you can build on top of that," he said.

"This is about ensuring that we are here to support local communities."

TWO HOMES

ONE STILL STANDING, THE OTHER DESTROYED BY WILDFIRE

KEVIN TUONG/FOR METRO

Return to FORT MAC

Alex Boyd
Metro | Edmonton

On the cul-de-sac, located 100 metres from the edge of the boreal forest, there is a lesson in the randomness of wildfire.

Paul Allain's house on the corner is gone. Its walls are beginning to buckle and the roof is caving. A scorched set of Christmas lights, all the bulbs shattered, hangs from the corner.

But Mike Stringer's house, right beside Allain's, has been spared.

And on Thursday, the two stood on their cul-de-sac, in the Timberlea neighbourhood of Fort McMurray, and absorbed the aftermath.

"A lot of hard work gone down the drain," Allain said, standing just outside the fence that someone — probably the RCMP — set up to separate his house from his neighbours.

"It took four years to get it to the way my wife wanted it."

Stringer, who had just arrived from Edmonton, appeared shaken. "I thought there were only a few houses that burned," he said.

Timberlea as a neighbourhood only saw 13 homes burn, but this cul-de-sac and the connected street bore the brunt of the damage.

A whole row of houses opposite has vanished, leaving skeletons of cars and children's playground equipment. From there, the fire jumped the street to devour a small cluster of homes, Allain's among them. It stopped at an invisible line dividing his house from his garage.

Allain joked that he saved something from the fire after all: The four dozen beers he'd left in the garage.

As he surveyed the ash, sprayed with a white compound to stop the spread of toxic chemicals it contains, he wasn't sure there was hope of retrieving the family photos and baby clothes that his wife asked him to look for. His first child was due the day of the fire.

Paul Allain's house was destroyed. KEVIN TUONG/FOR METRO

Luckily, his son arrived eight days early, so when forced to evacuate, Allain and his family were able to load the baby up and go.

Despite his loss, he said he plans to rebuild in the neighbourhood, which he added is the sort of place where people shovel each other's driveways when someone's away at work.

But he won't bring a newborn back until the house is fully complete. He hopes to return by Christmas.

Stringer said he's also worried about bringing his three-year-old daughter back. She's been asking why they aren't at home, but has asthma.

"All of my little girl's friends live over there," he says, gesturing towards the row of ash across the street.

CYBERBULLYING

Insurance to cover victims' legal costs

In a sign of the times, Chubb has brought its cyberbullying insurance to Canada.

The coverage for homeowners provides up to $60,000 to pay for a victim's expenses related to harassment and intimidation committed by computer, phone or mobile devices.

It suggests costs could include legal defence against wrongful termination or false arrest.

Costs could also include medical treatment for mental anguish or shock, security consultants and professional public relations services.

Chubb's coverage for victims of cyberbullying was introduced in the U.K. in December and has been offered in the United States since March.

The cyberbullying protection is now included as part of the company's family protection package, a $110 add on available to those who have the company's main homeowner's insurance policy.

France, Germany under water

Six dead as water levels continue to rise

Residents evacuate their home in Simbach am Inn, Germany (left) and in Nemours, south of Paris (right), on Thursday. Floods inundating parts of France and Germany have left six people dead and thousands trapped in homes or cars, as rivers have broken their banks from Paris to Bavaria. GETTY IMAGES & THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The rising waters of the Seine overflowed riverbanks, roads and rail tracks across Paris on Thursday, forcing authorities at the Louvre to do something they have not done in generations: hurriedly move precious artworks to higher ground.

European rivers have burst their banks this week from Paris to the southern German state of Bavaria, killing six people, trapping thousands and forcing everything from subway lines to castles to museums to shut down.

Water levels at the famous river that winds through the French capital are expected to peak Friday sometime about noon. Paris police upgraded their flood warning Thursday to "orange" — the second-highest level — for areas near the Seine, which means they believe the floods could have "a significant impact" on buildings and people.

The Louvre Museum announced it will be closed Friday to remove artworks from rooms threatened by the rising waters, preventatively shifting them upstairs. Its most famous painting, Leonardo da Vinci's Mona Lisa, is staying put on an upper floor.

The Orsay museum, on the left bank of the Seine, will also be closed Friday to prepare for potential flooding.

A spokeswoman at the Louvre said the museum had not taken such precautions in its modern history — since its 1993 renovation. Some underground storerooms created during the renovation are particularly vulnerable to flood risks.

She spoke on condition of anonymity in line with the museum's policy.

The Louvre did move art to higher floors in the flood that devastated Paris in 1910, but authorities were still checking to see if similar actions had been taken from then to 1993. About 200,000 artworks are located in flood-risk areas, mostly in storerooms.

French President Francois Hollande said a "natural disaster" will be formally declared next week for areas most affected by the flooding — and a separate fund will help villages and small towns deal with the damages.

In Berlin, German Chancellor Angela Merkel, meanwhile, promised continued help for flooded areas, telling reporters Thursday that she "mourns for those for whom the help has come too late, who lost their lives."

The floodwaters in Bavaria receded somewhat and disaster relief crews were helping to clear the wreckage, but there were warnings of more storms.

CINCINNATI ZOO

Gorilla exhibit re-opens

The Cincinnati Zoo said Thursday it will re-open its gorilla exhibit next week with a higher, reinforced barrier after a 3-year-old boy got into the enclosure, leading to the fatal shooting of a male gorilla.

Zoo spokeswoman Michelle Curley said the outer barrier will now be 42 inches high — a half foot taller than before — with solid wood beams on top and at the bottom, plus knotted rope netting at the bottom.

The zoo said there had been no earlier breaches in Gorilla World's 38-year history and that the previous barrier had passed multiple inspections.

"Our exhibit goes above and beyond standard safety requirements, but in light of what happened, we have modified the outer public barrier to make entry even more difficult," zoo director Thane Maynard.

Meanwhile, a prosecutor reviewing the police investigation of the case said he'll announce a decision on charges Monday.

DECODED Summer storm safety

WHEN LIGHTNING STRIKES

BOOM! CRACK! It wouldn't be summer without the sounds of a storm. It's true: Getting struck by lightning isn't likely, but it does happen — sometimes in surprising ways. Here's how to stay safe this summer.

BE CAREFUL

AVOID AT ALL COSTS

IN THE CAR
As long as it's not a convertible, the metal shell (NOT the rubber tires) protects you. But don't touch the metal interiors.

ON THE PHONE
If you're inside, you're likely safe. Lightning's electricity travels through the plumbing, electrical system or downspouts. But stay away from plugged-in appliances. Most lightning strikes indoors happen to people talking on landlines.

BY THE SINK OR SHOWER
There's a small chance you could be zapped by metal pipes, so put off showering or doing dishes or laundry until the storm has passed.

GOLFING
For the love of safety, don't be holding a metal golf club, umbrella or fishing pole!

OUT IN THE OPEN
Take shelter ASAP; not in a shed or under a tree. If you can't, do the lightning crouch: Get low to the ground with hands on your knees. Minimize your contact with the ground.

SWIMMING
Get to a safe spot quickly! In water (which conducts electricity), your body is likely one of the highest points around.

HOW LIGHTNING WORKS — WE THINK

1. WIND AND ICE
Small pieces of ice are tossed around in the clouds during a storm, creating static electricity.

2. CHARGE DIFFERENCE
Negative charges (electrons) accumulate at the base of the cloud, while positive charges collect at the top of the cloud and on the ground.

3. FLASH!
Positive and negative attract: A channel of negative charges (an electric current) surges towards the ground in a series of 50 to 100-metres steps. Currents of positive charges also move upward from high-up objects on the ground, like lightning rods.

4. BANG!
Lightning heats the air around it, causing it to expand and emit the BOOM we hear as thunder.

HOW WE MET OUR BFF
When and where did early humans befriend wolves, eventually domesticating the chow chows, chihuahuas and retrievers of today? It's been debated for decades. An Oxford genetic study of ancient and modern canines suggests humans domesticated dogs twice, once in Asia and once in Europe.

CRISP DISCOVERY
The discovery of the CRISPR system in 2012 rocked the field of genetics, allowing for precision editing of DNA. Now a similar system has been discovered for RNA, DNA's precursor. RNA has a role in a baffling array of processes. Now scientists may be able to manipulate cells in more ways than ever before.

Is treating food with radiation a good idea?

When I get an X-ray at the dentist everyone else clears out of the room. Why then, is it OK for me to eat an irradiated burger? — Angela, Calgary

A quick refresher: Radiation is movement of energy through space in the form of particles or waves. Heat, light, sound and nuclear fission are all radiation.

The gamma rays or X-rays used for sanitizing are not powerful enough to make food radioactive. There's no atom splitting going on here!

But the radiation can kill nasty bacteria, viruses or parasites lurking in the meat. There's a good reason Health Canada has announced it wants to allow the sale of irradiated ground beef: Four million Canadians get food poisoning every year and a couple of hundred die.

There's been half of a century of research on the health effects of food irradiation. Some concerns have been raised about the formation of free radicals and other potentially harmful chemicals during the process. But pretty similar stuff is created when you cook meat, and the scientific consensus is that radiation by-products aren't present in high enough amounts to have significant effects. Overall, the benefits far outweigh the risks.

As for your dentist's office: X-rays aren't benign. They have damaging effects on DNA that are cumulative. Over the long term, exposure increases the risk of cancer. That's why you wear a protective lead apron and why staff leave the room. But X-rays don't make you radioactive.

Your question shows why so many debates on fundamental questions of science devolve into the opposing sides shouting past each other. We're not all defining our terms the same way or working with the same base of knowledge. Three cheers for scientific literacy!

INTERVIEW

Emilia Clarke sees so much of herself in Me Before You

Richard Crouse
For Metro Canada

Emilia Clarke plays the central character in the film adaption of Jojo Moyes' bestselling novel Me Before You. CONTRIBUTED

These days Jojo Moyes is a best-selling author with a movie adaptation about to hit screens.

But before she wrote her best-known book she says, "I had not troubled the bestseller charts."

The former journalist, who has written 13 novels, hit publishing pay dirt with Me Before You, a romance about a young woman who has a life-changing relationship with a paralyzed man.

"I was driving my kids home from school," says Moyes, "and I heard this story on the news about a young athlete who had been left quadriplegic after an accident.

"Several years into life as a quadriplegic he had persuaded his parents to take him to Dignitas, which is a centre for assisted suicide in England to end his life.

"I was just really shocked by this story because as a human and a parent I could not envisage how a parent would agree to do that.

"I kept thinking I would fight to the death to keep my kids alive. Because I am an ex journalist, I started to read around it and read more about this young man and read more about the issue and I discovered it wasn't as black and white as I wanted to believe. Then it got me thinking, what would I be like if I were him? What would it be like to be his mother? What would it be like to be his girlfriend?"

> When I picture Lou, I can't help but picture Emilia. That is how fully she has taken root in my imagination. Jojo Moyes

The book sold north of 5 million copies and is now a movie starring Games of Thrones dragon lady Emilia Clarke. The 29-year-old actress plays the relentlessly cheerful Louisa, caregiver to quadriplegic Will, played by The Hunger Games star Sam Claflin.

"I read the amazing book first," the effervescent Clarke says. "I was reading it to see if I wanted to be in it. In the first couple of pages of Lou (I thought) this is who I am. This is so much me in every way. Then there was the story itself and the beauty within it; the heartbreak, the joy and the laughter fell on top of one another and I just said yes.

"I understand (Louisa) innately because if things ever get too dire I'm going to crack a joke. We're going to laugh through this. In those moments, at that peak when something bad has happened, and you're like, 'Let's laugh about it,' as you're laughing you start crying.

She also says she had a rigorous rehearsal process with co-star Claflin, so she got to know her character and their story really well.

"When you've got all that knowledge someone only has to say one thing and you are there because you have built her within you. You've built the story around you."

Moyes says finding the right person to play Louisa was important to not only the success of the film, but also to keep the fans of the book happy.

"I felt a huge responsibility to those people because it's not like this has only been read by 20,000 people," says Moyes.

"This is a much bigger thing. I will defy anybody to see Emilia as Lou and not feel this is a true representation of the character.

Decoding the minds of the turtles

TMNT

A Jungian psychologist analyzes our heroes

Colin McNeil
Metro | Canada

As the surprisingly informative theme song for the 1987 cartoon series tells us: "Leonardo leads, Donatello does machines … Raphael is cool but rude, Michelangelo is a party dude."

But is there more to our favourite heroes in a half-shell?

With the new Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles movie opening today, we took a tumble down the proverbial manhole with Dr. Jeff Howlin, a licensed psychologist "steeped in Jungian theory" to find out what really makes the Turtles tick. Dr. Howlin put the TMNT universe under the microscope of Jungian psychology – a school of analysis named for Swiss psychiatrist Carl Jung that entails "the study of the psyche's (or soul's) tendency toward wholeness."

For Howlin, the turtles shouldn't be looked at as individuals, but as four slices of a whole mental pizza. In his view — let's dub it Shell Theory — the four turtles represent one man's psyche.

"Yes we're talking about individual turtles," Howlin explains, "but all of this can be about the development of an individual and the different parts within them."

Each turtle represents four essential "masculine archetypes"– forming a well-rounded, healthy psyche when they work together as a team.

Michelangelo — the care-free adventurer. Donatello — the wiz kid with his head in the clouds. Leonardo — the diligent, disciplined student. And Raphael — the emotional fighter with anger issues. Each one is a splinter of the subconscious with "unique and important things to bring to the development of a single personality."

In other words, there's a little Raph, Mikey, Donnie and Leo in all of us.

"An important part of Jungian psychology is for a person to become who they are," says Howlin.

The term is individuation — but just call it destiny.

The turtles' journey toward being one cohesive fighting unit — their inter-family strife, and their training — is our hypothetical little boy's personality struggling to become a full-fledged man.

"If we're looking at a young boy developing into a teenager, developing into an adult, one of the tasks of the boy is to become familiar with these different parts — the Donatello, the Leonardo, the Michelangelo, the Raphael, and to get used to using them in their life," says Howlin.

"Somebody who's 12 could be really drawn to Michelangelo, and when they hit 18 they're going to be drawn to Leonardo."

A whole and healthy person, he says, has access to all four turtles.

TMNT is "really symbolically talking about what's happening inside of us on an emotional level," says Howlin.

THE REST OF THE CHARACTERS

April O'Neil
April represents the anima, or feminine archetype, present in every male mind, says Howlin. It's an important part of the male psyche.

Shredder
The turtles' sharp, chrome-coated nemesis is the self-destructive part of our psyche that wants to "stop growth and development; to stop the good that's happening; to stop the striving towards wholeness. That would be the inner shredder," says Howlin.

Casey Jones
The vigilante who uses sports equipment to beat people into submission is the stereotypical male archetype that society often pushes men to be: a hyper-aggressive representation of the animus.

Splinter
According to Howlin, the turtles' mentor and surrogate father clearly fits Jungian psychology's wise old man archetype — an often benevolent, mystical guiding figure to psyche's central hero.

CINEMA

Lolo plumbs deeper depths in rom-com

Steve Gow
For Metro Canada

Julie Delpy may not have come up with the definition herself, but she loves that the Village Voice called her latest film a "maternal horror film disguised as a rom-com."

"I would say that it is a bit of a mother's nightmare," said Delpy of Lolo — her new movie about "finding love again in your forties, especially with someone who doesn't seem like the perfect match."

In the comedy, Delpy (who co-wrote, starred and directed) is a Parisian fashion designer who may have found her ideal-albeit-awkward suitor until her malevolent 19-year-old son wages war on the would-be romance.

"I thought, what's the hardest thing to actually see as an enemy — your own child," said Delpy of the plot's origin. "There's no one you love more in the world so it was complicated."

Already a hit in France, Delpy may be gaining fans with the high-concept narrative but it wasn't without much effort. In fact, for someone who stepped into Tinseltown's spotlight over two decades ago and even earned a pair of Oscar nominations for co-authoring Before Sunset/Before Midnight — the 46-year-old triple-threat still struggles to catch the attention of Hollywood financing.

"I financed my film out of Europe because there's no way I can make my films (in America). I would not be a director if I waited for people to give me money in this country," said Delpy.

INVESTIGATION

Prince overdosed on fentanyl: Report

Prince died of an accidental overdose of the powerful painkiller fentanyl, autopsy results released Thursday show.

The 57-year-old singer was found dead April 21 at his Minneapolis-area estate.

According to a one-page report released by the Midwest Medical Examiner's Office, Prince administered the drug himself, but the date he took it was unknown. The office said it has completed its death investigation and had no further comment.

The findings confirm suspicions that opioids played a role in the musician's death. After he died, authorities began reviewing whether an overdose was to blame and whether he had been prescribed drugs in the preceding weeks.

At least two doctors' names have come up in the death investigation being conducted by the Carver County Sheriff's Office, the U.S. Attorney's Office in Minnesota and the Drug Enforcement Administration.

Dr. Michael Todd Schulenberg, a family practitioner, treated Prince twice in the weeks before his death and told investigators he prescribed medications for the singer.

Dr. Howard Kornfeld, a California addiction specialist, was asked by Prince's representatives on April 20 to help the singer.

Kornfeld sent his son Andrew on a redeye flight that night, and Andrew was among the people who found Prince's unresponsive body the next morning, according to Kornfeld's attorney, William Mauzy.

'CLEAN LIVING'

Friends claim they never saw Prince use drugs

Prince had a reputation for clean living and some friends said they never saw any sign of drug use. But longtime friend and collaborator Sheila E. has said Prince had physical issues from performing, citing hip and knee problems that she said came from years of jumping off risers and stage speakers in heels.

GRASSLANDS

Bisson, borealis — Prairies not so plain after all

Jenn Smith Nelson
For Torstar News Service

"Is there going to be anything to do?" My eldest son interrupts my count of Swainson's hawks atop passing power posts.

His worry is tied to the increasingly vast prairie vista complete with coulees and rolling soft hills greeting us — one completely devoid of play structures and stores and stuff. I urge him to keep an open mind, reminding him this isn't a typical trip.

It's a beautiful day with light, fluffy, white clouds dotting an azure sky. After nearly four hours driving southwest, my two sons, partner and I stop briefly in the Gateway to the Grasslands, Val Marie, Sask.

Grasslands National Park, our end destination, is an impressive expanse divided into two blocks — east and west.

Our cracked windows allow in a slight breeze carrying the sweet smell of sage-y grasses as we follow the Ecotour Road and happen upon a roadblock; a few hundred, in fact.

Bison as far as our eyes could see litter the panorama. Sunning, sauntering and grunting, young calves mosey alongside 2,000-pound giants. Spread out like hay bales, the herd is unfazed as our slow-moving vehicle weaves along.

We arrive at the Frenchman River Valley campsite area and cart gear to our tipi while the boys head off for a well-timed, Parks Canada Junior Naturalists program.

Eager to be free, they excitedly begin searching for evidence of life in the park, armed with lists and digital cameras. Once unpacked, we sit in oversized chairs and rest, taking in the camp's panoramic prairie view.

It's midday when they return, grins wide, eager to share what they've learned. It's scorching at more than 30 C, so we take refuge in the tipi, grabbing a snack before hopping back in the van to drive to 70 Mile Butte to hike and take in the sunset — a spot we've been told is the park's best vantage point.

Heading back the way we came, a sign warning of wildlife I didn't want to see — rattlesnakes — greets us at the entrance to the butte's upward winding trail.

TIP

Try to devote three to five days to your visit. There is much to do here, including astronomy, birding and fossil finding.

From the hundreds of bison that call Grasslands National Park home, to hunting for treasures to skies that leave you speechless, the area makes for a great camping trip. JENN SMITH NELSON

Scaling the fence, the boys jet off and keep a steady pace ahead as we meander along, stopping to read signs identifying indigenous plants and to admire lichen-covered rocks.

An hour later we are rewarded with an incredible view.

Spinning 360 degrees, we marvel at the sprawling green landscape while waiting for the sun to set. Building small rock Inukshuks cliffside, my boys make me nervous as they creep too close to the edge for my comfort.

Soon, the sun begins to dip; golden rays descend quickly along the prairie horizon. We head back knowing the dark will follow, but unexpectedly the sky comes alive. Hues of blue from the sunset deepen against rich tones of pink and strokes of violet, stopping me in my tracks — frozen by the display. Wispy clouds shift shapes, dancing across the sky. The boys who are ahead of me finally notice, and stare mesmerized.

Camp is dark when we return and the sky decides to put on another dazzling display. This time, it's the green swirls of aurora borealis amidst a clear, starry night in Canada's darkest dark sky preserve. My eldest oohs and awws before heading in to sleep, completely tuckered.

Jenn Smith Nelson was hosted by Parks Canada and Tourism Saskatchewan, neither of which reviewed or approved this story.

The course that Trump built

The Ayrshire coast has links to historical figures like William Wallace. Today the area is known for links like the Trump Turnberry (shown), recently relaunched by controversial U.S. presidential candidate Donald Trump, the Royal Troon — hosting the Open Championship in July — and the grandaddy of courses, Prestwick. CONTRIBUTED

AYRESHIRE COAST

Area hosts some of the best golf in the world

Brian Kendall
For Metro Canada

Home to Royal Troon, Prestwick, Trump Turnberry and other hallowed links, Scotland's Ayrshire coast is anticipating its most exciting golf season since the first-ever Open Championship was played here in 1860.

On June 1, Donald Trump relaunched the famous Ailsa course at his rebranded Trump Turnberry Resort. Ailsa's almost complete redesign by star golf architect Martin Ebert is part of a $500-million makeover of a 149-room luxury property acquired by the U.S. presidential hopeful in 2014.

Easily the most anticipated of all the changes made to Ailsa, which has hosted four Opens, is the transformation of the iconic par-four "lighthouse" hole into what Trump with typical immodesty calls "the most spectacular par three in the world."

An even bigger story is the Open's return to Royal Troon Golf Club, July 14 to 17.

Rory McIlroy, Jordan Spieth and the world's other top players will challenge a classic windswept links where the first nine holes run entirely alongside the sea.

Full of blind shots, crazy bounces and other quirks, Prestwick has hosted 24 Opens, including the first 12 ever played.

Host of eight previous Opens, Royal Troon is best known for its evilly bunkered par-three eighth hole, called the Postage Stamp. Just 123 yards long, it's the shortest hole in Open Championship golf.

Set on the shores of the Firth of Clyde in southwest Scotland, the district of Ayrshire is steeped in history, with links to William Wallace, Robert the Bruce and Scotland's national poet, Robert Burns.

The clay and thatch cottage where Burns was born is now a museum in the village of Alloway.

The seaside towns of Ayr, Girvan, Irvine, Largs, Prestwick and Troon are all popular with visitors. Others make nearby Glasgow, Scotland's largest and most vibrant city, their home base. Glasgow essentials include a shopping spree on Buchanan Street, a grandstand seat at a Celtic or Rangers soccer match, and a tour of Kelvingrove Art Gallery and Museum, the most visited museum in the United Kingdom outside of London.

Glasgow is an easy drive from most of Ayrshire's 44 18-hole golf courses, including three more that rank alongside Royal Troon and Trump Turnberry among the world's outstanding seaside links.

Founded in 1897, Western Gailes Golf Club is a wonderfully natural design that wends through dunes on a spit of land by Irvine Bay.

Some greens fold as if organically into the rumpled landscape, with others protected by sentinel-like dunes.

Just across the railway tracks from Western Gailes is Dundonald Links, which opened in 2003 but feels a century older. This acclaimed design by Kyle Phillips will host the European Tour's Scottish Open for the first time in 2017.

But the granddaddy of all Ayrshire courses is Prestwick Golf Club. Full of blind shots, crazy bounces and other quirks, Prestwick has hosted 24 Opens, including the first 12 ever played. Designed by the immortal Old Tom Morris, the course features six of his original greens, as well as three original holes.

Though no longer in the Open rotation, Prestwick is still a must-play for everyone who loves the game.

Charming Granada

La Catedral de Granada is easily Granada's most recognizable feature in a city full of beautiful colonial architecture. NICARGUA TOURIST BOARD

CENTRAL AMERICA

Nicargua gives Costa Rica a run for its money

It was just over 20 years ago, when the political turmoil settled down, that a few intrepid surfers and backpackers started exploring the Pacific coast of Nicargua as an alternative to increasingly pricey Costa Rica.

Today, travellers are increasingly discovering this Central American hidden gem.

"There are so many people saying 'Forget Costa Rica, that's over.' Nicaragua is the new big destination in Central America," says Raymundo Solorzano, a guide with 22 years experience.

Granada, a small, traditional-looking city on Lake Nicaragua, is easily the most picturesque hub for nightlife, festivals and foodism, beating out the less walkable capital, Managua, where life gravitates towards the suburbs.

Granada is laid out in accordance with Spanish colonial urban planning, with narrow cobblestone streets spreading out from a pedestrian-friendly, tree-filled square — similar to a Mexican zocalo. This is the town's heart, where street vendors hawk goods and bands play to tourists and families alike on weekends and holidays, all under the shadow of La Catedral de Granada, the city's most recognizable building.

Connecting Granada's central square to the malecon (the lakefront recreational area) is Calle La Calzada, a charming street that, at night, is full of people relaxing on patios, people spilling out from the sidewalk cafés, restaurants and ubiquitous Irish bars.

These bars do a brisk trade in tropical rum cocktails, notably, the Macua, Nicaragua's answer to the Margarita. Invented in Granada in 2006, the country's signature drink is a tart and refreshing lemon, orange and guava juice mixture, spiked with a heavy-handed pour of Flor de Cana, which, for all intents and purposes, is the country's only rum.

While the rum has a loyal local following, that's only part of the overall ethos of this remarkably locavore-friendly nation resistant to multinationals.

Solorzano shakes his head disapprovingly at the prospect of rums made in "far away" places such as Guatemala. He points out there are very few American fast-food outlets in Nicaragua.

"The most popular fast food here is the fritanga," Solarzano explains. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Serena Williams faced two match points before rallying for a 5-7, 6-4, 6-1 win over Yulia Putintseva in the quarter-finals of the French Open

Barney swinging a hot stick

BLUE JAYS

Infielder has been a key cog in team's recent success

Darwin Barney knew he wanted to re-sign with Toronto as soon as he became a free agent at the end of last season.

With the way he's been playing lately, the Blue Jays are glad he did.

Barney went 3-for-3 on Wednesday to pick up his third multi-hit game over his last five starts as Toronto cemented a three-game sweep over their division rival New York Yankees with a 7-0 victory.

"You walk into this clubhouse and these guys are swinging the bats the way they do it just kind of spreads," said Barney, who joined the Blue Jays in a late-season trade with the Los Angeles Dodgers. "I took that confidence that these guys have to the plate with me last year, and that was a big part of the reason why when I was a free agent I wanted to come back.

"I like the feeling here, I like the attitude we bring. You can be yourself at the plate and you don't have to do too much. There's a lot of power in this lineup and I think that had a lot to do with me really pushing to come back."

Darwin Barney hits a two-run single against the Yankees on Tuesday at Rogers Centre.
TOM SZCZERBOWSKI/GETTY IMAGES

Toronto's sweep over New York was the Blue Jays' first of the season and their first sweep of the Yankees at Rogers Centre in 16 seasons.

.536

Barney is batting .536 over his last 10 games.

After starting the year with a disappointing 11-14 April, Toronto seems to have turned a corner, going 17-12 through May and winning their first game in June.

Barney has been a big part of that.

The infielder, who's starting with more frequency since all-star shortstop Troy Tulowitzki hit the disabled list with a quadriceps injury on May 28, is batting .344 through 33 games — and .536 over his last 10.

Barney made a name for himself as a defensive specialist, especially after winning a Gold Glove with the Chicago Cubs in 2012, but he didn't start his major-league career with that reputation. Recently he's been working with Blue Jays hitting coach Brook Jacoby to round out his game.

"Brook and I sat down and talked about what made me a good hitter my first two seasons in the big leagues. We looked at some video and tried to get back to that guy," Barney said. "That's basically it. Just being myself, not trying to do too much and putting good at-bats together."

Toronto (29-26) had an off day Thursday before beginning a three-game series against the division-leading Red Sox (32-21) at Boston's Fenway Park. Friday's game will mark the Blue Jays' 33rd against AL East teams already this season, more than any other team in the division. THE CANADIAN PRESS

RAPTORS

Casey agrees to 3-year, $18M deal

The lynchpin of the unprecedented success of the Toronto Raptors over the last three years has been their leader, an unrelentingly consistent and well-respected basketball lifer who has been steadfast in trying to create a culture of winning since the day he arrived.

It should come as no surprise then that a man who craves winning as much as team president Masai Ujiri does would want to have even more consistency in the message and its delivery and keep Dwane Casey around.

Confirming one of the worst kept secrets in franchise history, the Raptors have given Casey a three-year contract worth $18 million that will kick in at the start of the 2016-17 season.

The deal has yet to be officially signed, and the Raptors will wait until next week for an official celebration of the event, but the 59-year-old Casey will be back for his sixth season starting in October.

Sid's foresight has Pens flying

STANLEY CUP FINAL

Pittsburgh 'C' a commanding presence through 2 games

It is almost as if Sidney Crosby is single-handedly imposing his will on the Stanley Cup final.

Crosby essentially called the shot on the play that gave Pittsburgh a 2-1 overtime win on Wednesday and a 2-0 lead as the best-of-seven final transitioned to San Jose for Games 3 and 4.

But more than that, Crosby's unselfish play and off-ice leadership are motivating his teammates to rise to new levels. If there's an optional practice, Crosby is almost certainly on the ice working to get better.

"Sid, he's just been a horse out there," Penguins coach Mike Sullivan said. "For me right now,

Sidney Crosby GETTY IMAGES

I think he's inspiring for our group. I know our players recognize the effort that he's putting in. You can see it in his body language. He's excited about this opportunity that we have. He's trying to make the most of it."

Bu some Sharks don't like the way he's been lining up in the faceoff circle.

"He cheats," San Jose centre Logan Couture said. "He gets away with it. He's Sidney Crosby. He times (the faceoffs) and they don't kick him out for some reason, probably because of who he is."

Sullivan defended Crosby in a Thursday conference call.

"Listen, all centres that go in there and take faceoffs, they're trying to get an edge. That's just the reality of it," he said. "Sid isn't doing anything their guys aren't doing."

Either way, the overtime goal was a thing of beauty. The box-score line reads Sheary, from Letang and Crosby. But it was Crosby who told everyone where to stand and drew up the play.

"Sid came up to me before the draw and told me to line up on the wall," said Sheary. "We hadn't really done that before. He said he's going to wing it back and Tanger is going to find me in the soft area there. Found it pretty perfectly."

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20
Don't take it personally if relations with siblings, relatives and neighbours are strained today. A lot of people feel this way today. It's just how it is.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
Financial matters might disappoint you today. Quite likely, something will happen that makes you feel broke. Join the club; we number millions. You can overcome this hurdle another day.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Relations with partners and close friends are strained today, definitely. Just don't expect too much from anyone. Easy come, easy go. It's no big deal.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
You might feel lonely or cut off from others today. This is a fleeting thing. Tomorrow is a good day to make new resolutions, because it's a New Moon.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Someone older or more experienced might be critical of you today. (This always goes over like a lead balloon.) Just cope as best you can. Don't take it personally.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Relations with the family authority figure will not be easy today. Therefore, avoid an important discussion if you can. In fact, run the other way!

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
You might be discouraged or worried today. Please know that this is just a temporary frame of mind; don't let it get you down. Tomorrow you can make new resolutions that are exciting.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
This is a poor day to propose your financial ideas or to buy or sell anything, because someone will block your plans. Many people meet with obstacles today.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
This is a dicey day for dealing with partners and close friends. However, all relationships go up and down, don't they? It's just for one day.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
You might feel lonely or cut off from others today. The irony is that you are building the fence that imprisons you.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Don't be discouraged if someone older criticizes you or shoots down your plans. This is happening to a lot of people today.

Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
This is a poor day to ask for approval or permission from anyone in a position of authority. Quite likely, the person's answer will be, "Talk to the hand." Choose another day.
